Betty Crocker for Senate

Betty Crocker had been a household name to Minnesotans since 1921 due to print and radio advertising by General Mills. When World War II rationing adversely affected the market for baking products, General Mills began an advertising campaign to Vote for Betty for Senate as an April Fool's Day joke.

Hubert Horatio Humphrey, Jr. — The Happy Warrior

In his distinguished, life-long public service career that included serving as Minneapolis mayor, five-term U.S. senator from Minnesota and the nation's vice president, Hubert Horatio Humphrey, Jr.'s fight for expansion of civil rights would be his hallmark.

Humphrey first took the political stage in support of civil rights in his inaugural address as mayor of Minneapolis. In that speech, he proclaimed, "Government can no longer ignore displays of bigotry, violence and discrimination."

His crusade to ensure that all citizens had the right to fully participate in the democratic process gained national attention in a renowned speech on civil rights at the 1948 Democratic National Convention. The following year he began his tenure in the U. S. Senate where his unrelenting fight for the expansion of civil and voting rights earned him the nickname "Happy Warrior."

One of his greatest accomplishments as senator was his successful effort to break the filibuster preventing a vote on the Civil Rights Act. As floor leader for the bill and aware the Democratic senators were split, Humphrey had to recruit Republicans to his cause to ensure a two-thirds majority vote. By enlisting the help and leadership of Republican Majority Leader Sen. Everett Dirksen, Illinois, Humphrey secured the 71 votes needed to end the filibuster. On June 19, 1964, the Senate passed the Civil Rights Act on a vote of 73-27.

Months later as vice president of the United States, Humphrey watched as President Lyndon Johnson signed the 1965 Voting Rights Act into law —extending voting rights to millions of Americans who had for generations been denied that right.
